MINNEAPOLIS (May 4, 2021) — Lathrop GPM is proud to announce that it has named Marya Robben, a partner in the firm's Minneapolis office, to lead its Trusts, Estates & Legacy Planning Practice Group. As practice group leader, Robben will guide practice growth and oversee the delivery of customized solutions to clients' most important wealth-transfer and business-succession concerns.

Robben, who joined the firm in 2017, practices primarily in the areas of estate planning, estate and gift taxation, fiduciary representation, probate administration, trust formation and administration, and guardianship and conservatorship law.

"I'm excited to step into this new role to oversee and grow this multi-disciplinary practice," Robben said. "Our team's technical skill is unmatched, and we take great pride in helping clients navigate estate planning, administration and litigation. They can rest easy, even during these uncertain times, knowing a full advisory team is creating a strategic plan that fits within their legacy goals."

The group serves clients from coast to coast, combining sophisticated representation with Midwestern practicality.

"Marya's strong technical estate planning and leadership skills are invaluable to her clients and to our firm's Trusts, Estates & Legacy Planning group," said Managing Partner Cameron Garrison. "This group shines at serving clients' need to protect their legacies, and that will no doubt continue under Marya's leadership as an important part of Lathrop GPM's strategic growth in 2021."
