Rachel Orr focuses her practice on all aspects of real estate development and capital finance, including secured lending transactions involving various tax credits, development incentives, and related real estate issues. Rachel routinely represents lenders, investors, and developers in real estate development projects. Rachel specializes in counseling clients nationwide with respect to various aspects of acquiring, developing, managing, and disposing of multifamily housing properties that involve various government programs and incentives, including USDA Rural Development Section 515 and 538 loans, low-income housing tax credits, historic rehabilitation tax credits, HUD loans, and Section 8 assistance, among others. Rachel has experience advising clients on and structuring new business entity formations, assisting in post-issuance compliance requirements, and providing key knowledge on transactions involving development and financing incentives.

Representative Experience

- Counseled client regarding the use of various development incentives, including the formation of a qualified opportunity fund, to assist with the construction and development of approximately 151 residential apartment units.
- Served as developer's counsel with respect to the development of a hotel project located in Oregon, which included acquiring and partitioning real property and negotiating development incentives with local governmental authorities.
- Assisted client with the formation of a qualified opportunity zone business, the amendment and restatement of qualified opportunity fund organizational documents, and the adoption of a written schedule to satisfy the working capital safe harbor under the U.S.
