The government has launched an investigation of one of your company's business practices. You want to cooperate fully, but in such a way as to minimize the disruption to your business. Responding improperly may create another avenue for the government to pursue: obstruction of justice charges.

Join us on Thursday, November 2nd, for a discussion about how to identify and avoid obstruction of justice traps as your company responds to an investigation. Two distinguished panels will lead the discussion in a fast-paced examination of a "real-life" hypothetical.

Obstruction of justice traps will be addressed in a variety of contexts, including:

- Communications to employees and the public
- Representation of employees
- Responding to grand jury subpoenas
- Review and disclosure of documents

- Witness interviews
- Pre-indictment pleas

Panelists will include:

- Rob Stapleton, Sr. Legal Counsel, MoneyGram International, Inc.
- Tim Rank, Assistant U.S. Attorney, Chief of the Fraud and Public Corruption Section U.S. Department of Justice
- Patrick Milan, Chief Insights Officer, Tunheim Partners
- Jon Hopeman, Gray Plant Mooty
- Marnie Fearon, Gray Plant Mooty
