According to Lindsey, “I help clients solve problems relating to the ownership and operation of their businesses. I pay attention to details and am committed to responsiveness and timely delivery of work. I will turn the stones that need to be turned.” According to one client, “Lindsey did a fantastic job of walking us through the process and identified our best options in terms we could understand.”

Lindsey Day is a business lawyer who focuses her practice on advising, guiding and solving problems for middle-market, closely held and family-owned businesses. She is co-chair of Lathrop GPM’s Closely Held Business Institute and routinely counsels both buyers and sellers of closely held and family-owned businesses in finding practical solutions to get them where they want to go. She supports them with general business law, corporate governance, contract negotiations, strategic transactions, corporate restructurings, ownership transitions and mergers and acquisitions. She is also active with the firm’s Women’s Initiative Network.

Lindsey enjoys working with well-established, legacy companies to help them navigate complex legal issues as their “legal quarterback.” She regularly serves clients in a variety of industries, including:

- Grocery stores
- Manufacturing
- Private equity and venture capital
- Professional services
- Retail

Complex Legal Document Drafting, Review and Counsel

The drafting, review and counsel for complex legal documents are of critical importance to businesses at every stage of their lifecycle. Legal documents and contracts serve as the foundation for the future of the business, outlining explicit terms. Lindsey handles legal document drafting, review and counsel with precision, safeguarding that each clause is legally sound. She also helps to identify potential loopholes or weak areas and rectifies them before finalization. Moreover, Lindsey provides clients with invaluable counsel, advising on the best strategies and decisions to meet their goals. She regularly counsels clients about:

- Buy-sell agreements
- Change of control agreements
- Consultants, contractors and vendor procurement
- Corporate Transparency Act (CTA) compliance
- Employee ownership
- Operating agreements
- Redemption agreements
- Services and supply agreements

Succession Planning

Business owners often face a crossroads when it comes to succession planning, whether it is a generational leadership transition, sale to a strategic buyer or private equity or other successors. With years of experience, Lindsey understands the nuances of this process and is equipped with the necessary tools and knowledge to help clients navigate succession successfully. She recognizes the emotional nature of passing on a business and is capable of managing these situations with tact and respect. In collaboration with other service providers and Lathrop GPM's Private Client Services practice, she also provides clients with a deep understanding of the intricate laws and regulations surrounding succession planning, ensuring a company's legacy is protected and transitions smoothly.
