According to her clients, Mara is “a responsive, professional and thorough communicator. She listens and understands, is practical and collaborative.” One client said Mara is “the gold standard” for outside counsel and should “teach a course in client service.” Mara says, “I have a client-first philosophy and believe that’s the way it should always be.”

A defense attorney for manufacturing, agribusiness, religious and educational organizations, Mara Cohara is the leader of the Tort, Insurance Recovery and Environmental Practice Group and recently served on the firm’s Executive Committee. A skilled litigator and advisor, Mara is known for her client service and responsiveness to clients’ needs. She’s also known for listening to clients, implementing a customized approach to their legal matters, and collaborating with them so she can identify legal solutions that are in their best interest.

Mara handles cases involving toxic torts, nuisance, product liability, premises liability, contracts, breach of warranty, consumer protection litigation, and the defense of religious and educational institutions. She often defends odor nuisance cases arising from auto plants, industrial farms, feed lots, industrial facilities, and mills, and defends claims for some of the world’s largest manufacturers and distributors. Mara has considerable experience coordinating large-scale bet-the-company matters, conducting internal investigations, and defending high-profile lawsuits that attract media and community attention such as:

- Odor Nuisance Litigation: Individual Claimants to Class Actions
- Religious Institutions as Defendants
- Breach of Warranty
- National Coordinating Counsel

■ Consumer Protection Litigation

With an established record of bringing adversarial parties to agreement, Mara is an effective and efficient advocate throughout the litigation process. She often secures summary judgment dismissals, discovery victories and favorable settlements for her clients. Her reputation is built on resolving issues and her take-charge attitude.

Mara enjoys serving clients in a coordinating counsel role. She provides straightforward and intentional guidance using her finely-honed problem-solving and solutions-oriented approach, and client service skills. She is collaborative, empathetic and prioritizes staying on top of clients' businesses and industry trends and proactively providing clients with ideas, opportunities and solutions to legal and other potential business challenges.

With strong community ties, Mara is active in dozens of civic and legal organizations. She serves on the Kansas City Sports Commission and Foundation Board of Directors. She is on Park University's Board of Trustees and chairs the Trusteeship Committee. She is on the Latino Coalition Board and is the Co-Founder and Co-Chair of the Lantz Welch Citizen Brigade. Her support of Operation Breakthrough has earned her the election of lifetime member of Lawyers Encouraging Academic Performance (LEAP) board.

According to Mara, "I don't simply tell clients how to solve their problems; I work in collaboration with them to identify the best approach and the best solutions. I take time to understand their goals and needs, and to identify the solutions that are most effective and efficient. I take each client issue seriously and make sure we have the right person on the team to manage each matter. Identifying a client team is as much about legal skill and prowess as it is about culture and fit, while achieving the resolutions that are in the best interest of each client."

Experience

National Coordinating Counsel

- Serving as litigation counsel for one of the largest meat-processing companies in the U.S. The relationship began with the Lathrop GPM team successfully defending this client in a dozen odor nuisance cases in Missouri and subsequent insurance coverage litigation. Over the past decade, Mara has deepened this relationship and now coordinates the firm's work for this client, which ranges from advice on environmental compliance issues, tort claims and accident investigations, business disputes, and continuing work on actual and threatened odor nuisance matters.
- Managing the firm's relationship with a Canadian-based agricultural technology company with operations in the U.S. Mara strategizes with the client to assist in executing their aggressive growth strategy and coordinates with Lathrop GPM's subject matter experts.
- Overseeing the firm's relationship with and work for religious institutions across the country in connection with the investigation, defense and prevention of sexual misconduct claims.
- Serving as panel counsel for a Fortune 500 diesel engine and powertrain automotive component power leader on a wide variety of litigation from national class actions to large fleet warranty disputes to serious personal injury accidents, and commercial litigation.
- Managing the firm's relationship with a major manufacturer of steel storage tanks. The firm handles a variety of matters such as breach of contract disputes, licensing agreements, non-compete agreements, responding to business records subpoenas, risk management and product manual reviews, and employment issues.
- Serving as litigation counsel and co-relationship partner for a privately held tool and equipment retailer.

Odor Nuisance Litigation: Individual Claimants to Class Actions

- Assisted a national pulp and paper manufacturing company in responding to claims related to the alleged noxious odors from a facility in Georgia. Quickly after the plaintiffs filed a class action lawsuit against the client, Mara resolved the matter by getting it dismissed with prejudice.
- Defended a national pulp and paper manufacturing company against allegations that one of its mills along a river was releasing toxic chemicals and odor into the atmosphere, causing damage to plaintiffs' health and property. The state supreme court ultimately denied certification for two appeals.
- Worked with a team of lawyers to defeat class certification on behalf of a national auto manufacturer in an environmental odor nuisance case which would have included more than 13,000 residences and spanned over twenty-four square miles.
- Represented a waste management company in two class actions. Both matters were dismissed, one of which was dismissed without prejudice, on motion of the Plaintiffs, following discovery, which was prior to class certification briefing.
- Represented an agricultural and food production company in multiple cases involving 280 plaintiffs who brought claims regarding odor nuisance, emanating from hog farms across Missouri. The representation involved more than ten cases and three that went to trial.
- Defended a large animal agriculture company in multiple nuisance cases. The firm worked with state communities and the state legislature to redefine Missouri's nuisance law for both temporary and permanent nuisance.
- Provided a cross-functional team to address a personal injury claim filed against a family-owned livestock operation. Obtained a confidential settlement following a successful mediation process. In addition, secured coverage from the insurance company which resulted in full coverage of the settlement and defense costs.
- Defended a multinational food company against several hundred claims that the company's hog barns created a nuisance. Achieved two defense verdicts prior to settlement of the remaining claims.

Religious Institutions as Defendants

- Served as lead trial counsel in a multi-defendant lawsuit in which an adult plaintiff claimed he was assaulted during a counseling session that took place when he was a minor. The district court dismissed the claim, finding it was barred by the Kansas Statute of Repose, and the Kansas Court of Appeals affirmed. See F.M. Doe v. Popravak, et al., Case No. 16-115282 (Kan. Ct. App. Jun. 9, 2017).
- Defended a large religious institution against claims arising from allegations of abuse. Mara's team's strategy led to a complete dismissal of all claims at the earliest possible stage before the district court. The dismissal was affirmed on appeal.
- Settled a claim following a three-week jury trial in which a single plaintiff was seeking more than $10 million alleging sexual abuse against a religious institution. Settled thirty-one other claims for less than the demand in the initial case.
- Obtained dismissals of more than one hundred claims against religious organization clients and has helped develop a body of law that strengthens available defense to religious organizations.

- Represented a diocese in a group settlement of fifty-two claims and a subsequent group settlement of thirty-two claims.

Automotive Component Manufacturers & Breach of Warranty

- Serves as litigation counsel for a Fortune 500 diesel engine and powertrain automotive component power leader, handling numerous product liability and personal injury lawsuits, investigations and breach of warranty claims.
- Assists internal experts at a Fortune 500 diesel engine and powertrain automotive component power leader in drafting warranty language, working with the implementation and operation of warranty programs, and tracking applicable state warranty laws across the United States.
- Represented a major equipment manufacturer in a large breach of warranty matter involving an Original Engineering Manufacturer (OEM), incorporating the client's engines in their heating equipment. The firm conducted a thorough investigation and mediations, which resulted in a favorable settlement for the client, who was pleased with the outcome.
