Patrick is a seasoned trial lawyer with a proven record of success before courts across the nation. Beyond the courtroom, he adeptly represents clients in administrative proceedings and arbitrations, offering comprehensive counsel in dispute resolution. His deep understanding spans a broad spectrum of conflicts, including landlord/tenant matters, lease disputes, evictions, securities litigation, limited liability company disputes, boundary disagreements and breach of contract claims.

A Wyoming native and member of the Wyoming State Bar, Patrick maintains strong ties to his home state, regularly representing clients in litigation involving the unique challenges of mountain real estate developments, complex business disputes and disputes regarding energy matters throughout Wyoming's state and federal courts.

Prior to joining Lathrop GPM, Patrick's career also included tenures at two other major corporate law firms in Colorado. Before entering private practice, Patrick honed his legal acumen as a clerk for Judge Daniel J. Kaup of Colorado's Eighth Judicial District Court. His foundational business insights were developed during his time at Deloitte & Touche, LLP in Philadelphia and Denver, where he conducted audits for companies in the public utility, insurance and oil and gas sectors.
